39 Essex Chambers has a strong planning, environmental and property group, comprising leading practitioners who are widely regarded as combining a strong academic background with pragmatism and versatility as well as being easy to work with. Recent, and three time, winners of the Chambers & Partners Environment/Planning Set of the Year, our team includes three of the last five Environment/Planning Silks of the Year. We have been described by Chambers & Partners as housing "a fine band of leading and much in-demand individuals". The environmental and planning team draws on the strength of chambers in public, energy, commercial and common law, including local government probity issues, to provide comprehensive advice in all areas of environmental, planning and property law. Our other relevant expertise is in European Union, international, tax and criminal law.

Chambers has been involved in a number of leading cases in recent years, including those involving issues of climate change; compulsory purchase and compensation; contaminated land; environmental impact assessment/strategic environmental assessment; energy and energy projects; nuclear energy; flooding; highways, footpaths and rights of way; minerals; nature conservation; nuisance; pollution prevention and control/environmental permitting; planning and environmental prosecutions; transport projects; village greens and commons; waste, landfill and waste projects; and water and utilities. www.39essex.com

Landmark Chambers is considered a leading set in environmental law by the legal directories. We are ranked in Band 1 in environment in Chambers & Partners 2015 and Legal 500 2014, which notes that Landmark is "at the cutting edge of environmental law developments", and is "full of talent; young, bright people who are experienced in a wide spectrum of environmental law and can always be relied on to deliver". Landmark's environmental law practice is wide-ranging. Members appear regularly before tribunals and the Higher Courts in environmental cases. They also regularly appear before the Luxembourg Courts and the Aarhus Convention Compliance Committee on environmental cases. Landmark Chambers is at the forefront of developments in environmental law at domestic, European and international levels. www.landmarkchambers.co.uk

Exponent is a large multinational scientific and engineering consulting firm providing services to industry, industrial and trade associations, insurance companies, law firms and governmental agencies. Exponent is often engaged on challenging environmental issues, damage assessment, product registration and risk assessment/analysis, high profile engineering and regulatory problems. Exponent has the largest environmental and engineering forensic consultancy in the world and has, for example, provided causal analysis of explosions such as the 1988 Piper Alpha oil platform in the North Sea and the Buncefield Depot in Hertfordshire in 2005. Recent work includes support during the response to the Gulf of Mexico Deepwater Horizon incident, the age dating of wastes in contaminated land sites in the U.K., dioxin/furan source evaluation at a steel mill in Taranto, Italy, and testimony at the World Court for damage assessment of pulp mill pollution in South America.

Exponent has approximately 900 staff located in offices in the USA, UK, Switzerland, Germany and China. Our multidisciplinary team of scientists, physicians, engineers, and regulatory consultants perform both in-depth scientific research and analysis, and very rapid-response evaluations to provide our clients with the critical information that both day-to-day and strategic decisions can require. Exponent is certified to ISO 9001. www.exponent.com
